If it appears absolutely necessary, the prohibition of entry may also be used to prohibit the person from being present at other places to be specified, in particular the workplace of the person at risk.

3) In the case of a prohibition on entering one's own dwelling, particular care must be taken to ensure that this intervention in the private life of the person concerned respects the principle of proportionality (Article 23). The National Police is authorised to take away all keys to the dwelling and any weapons; the National Police is obliged to give the person the opportunity to take urgently needed personal effects and to inform the person of accommodation options. If it becomes necessary for the person concerned to visit the dwelling that the person is prohibited from entering, the person may do so only in the presence of the National Police.

If the person concerned fails to specify a delivery point, the provisions applicable to the service of legal actions shall apply.

5) The National Police is also obliged to inform the person at risk about the possibility of a preliminary injunction under Article 277a of the Execution Act and about suitable support facilities. 7) The order of a prohibition of entry must be reviewed by the Commissioner within 72 hours. For this purpose, the Commissioner may consult all institutions and bodies that can contribute to establishing the relevant facts. The Commissioner may also consult the public health officer or the physician on duty. If the Commissioner determines that the conditions for ordering a prohibition of entry are not met, the Commissioner must immediately lift the order with respect to the person concerned; the person at risk must be informed immediately that the prohibition of entry is being lifted. The lifting of the prohibition of entry and the provision of information to the person at risk must, if possible, be carried out verbally or by telephone by the National Police or in writing by personal delivery. The keys and weapons removed in accordance with paragraph 3 must be handed over to the person concerned when the prohibition of entry is lifted; in the case of an application for a preliminary injunction under Article 277a of the Execution Act, they must be deposited with the court.

8) Compliance with a prohibition of entry must be verified at least once during the first three days of its validity by the National Police. The prohibition of entry shall end upon expiry of the tenth day following the order thereof; where an application for a preliminary injunction under Article 277a of the Execution Act is filed within this period, the prohibition of entry shall end with the service of the court's decision to the respondent, but at the latest upon expiry of the twentieth day following the order of the prohibition of entry. Article 34a¹¹⁴

*Special means of data collection*¹¹⁵

1) The National Police may, while respecting the secrecy of correspondence, postal secrecy, and the secrecy of communications, collect data of persons with respect to whom there are specific reasons to believe that they are committing criminal offences, as well as their contact persons or accompanying persons, using means as referred to in paragraph 2, only if:¹¹⁶

- a) the collection of data is not otherwise possible without jeopardising the performance of the task;¹¹⁷
- b) the measure is not disproportionate to the importance of the facts to be clarified; and
- c) doing so is necessary:
 - 1. to avert a serious danger;
 - 2. as a preventive measure to combat a criminal offence as referred to in § 103(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure; or

3) The National Police may collect data in or from premises not accessible to the public using the means referred to in paragraph 2(b) without the consent of the authorised person only if doing so is indispensable to avert an immediate and serious danger to life, limb, or freedom of a person or considerable damage to property or assets. Action may be taken in this respect for the purpose of performing duties under Article 2(2) (State security) only if:¹¹⁸

- a) a specific person, organisation, or group is suspected of specifically endangering the existence of the State and its institutions (presumed endangerer);
- b) the seriousness and nature of the danger justifies it;
- c) specific and current facts and incidents give rise to the assumption that a presumed endangerer is using this non-public space to:
 - 1. meet with third parties;
 - 2. hide themselves or third parties there;
 - 3. store material there; or
 - 4. pursue in any other way activities serving their purposes; and
- d) the fundamental rights of the persons concerned are interfered with only to the extent necessary.

If data is linked to each other, that data is subject to the corresponding data processing rules and access restrictions, subject to paragraph 6.¹²⁹

For this purpose, corresponding data from other information systems of the National Administration may also be included, to the extent that there is a legal basis allowing the National Police to access such data using a retrieval procedure.¹³⁰

2) The National Police may use personal data it processes for the purpose of basic and continuing police training in anonymised form. Anonymisation may be waived only if it would be contrary to the purpose of basic or continuing training and if the legitimate interests of the person concerned in maintaining secrecy do not outweigh the need for the waiver.

V. International administrative assistance¹⁶²

A. In general¹⁶³

Article 35¹⁶⁴

Basic principle

1) The National Police may request foreign security authorities and organisations to transmit personal data, including special categories of personal data and personal data relating to criminal convictions and offences, or to perform other official acts, where necessary for the performance of its duties.¹⁶⁵

2) The National Police may provide administrative assistance to foreign security authorities or organisations in accordance with Article 35a:

- a) on request, provided that doing so is necessary for foreign security authorities or organisations to perform their duties within the meaning of Article 2 and provided that there is reciprocity;
- b) on its own initiative, where this could be relevant in a specific case for the recipient to assist in averting specific dangers to public safety and order or to prevent and combat criminal offences.

3) Administrative assistance must not be provided if there is reason to believe that:

- a) such administrative assistance would violate the public order or other essential interests of Liechtenstein;
- b) the facts in question concern a criminal matter relating to taxes, duties, customs, or foreign exchange;
- c) sensitive interests of the person concerned or third parties are violated, in particular if those rights are violated in the receiving country which are granted by the Convention of 4 November 1950 for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms or if appropriate guarantees pursuant to Article 78 of the Data Protection Act for adequate data protection would not be ensured, subject to Article 79 of the Data Protection Act;¹⁶⁶

- d) the requesting security authority or organisation would use this information for political, military, religious, or racist purposes.

4) Personal data that has been transmitted to foreign security authorities or organisations may be used for purposes other than those on which the transmission is based only with the prior consent of the National Police. This must be notified to the requesting authority. Consent shall be given only if the data transmission would have been allowable for that purpose.¹⁶⁷

5) The National Police is obliged to record the incident giving rise to the data transmission as well as the content, receiving office, and time of the data transmission. This record may be used only to check the permissibility of the transmission.

6) The National Police must notify a foreign security authority or organisation if personal data transmitted to that authority or organisation has been processed incorrectly or unlawfully and must therefore be corrected or deleted.¹⁶⁸

Article 35a¹⁶⁹

Nature of administrative assistance

- 1) The National Police may provide administrative assistance by:
 - a) transmitting personal data, including special categories of personal data, such as in particular genetic data, biometric data uniquely identifying a natural person, and health data, and personal data relating to criminal convictions and offences, as well as data based on profiling;¹⁷⁰
 - b) granting and supporting foreign undercover investigations on Liechtenstein territory;
 - c) carrying out other measures which do not require a court order.

- b) the gathering of information from other offices of the National Administration, administrative authorities, and the courts;
- c) police questioning;
- d) surveillance, where this is an essential condition for the effective performance of administrative assistance.

3) Administrative assistance in accordance with paragraph 1(b) shall require the approval of the Commissioner. Such approval may be granted only if clarification of the facts for the performance of police duties within the meaning of Article 2 would be futile or significantly more difficult without the planned investigative measure and provided that there is reciprocity.

4) With the approval of the Commissioner, organs of foreign security authorities may be present during police questioning and surveillance, to the extent necessary for the performance of their police duties within the meaning of Article 2 and provided that there is reciprocity. However, these organs may not perform official acts on behalf of the requesting country. In the case of police questioning, the person concerned shall be informed of the presence of the organ of a foreign security authority.

5) The Government may decide to hand over a person as referred to in Article 2(1)(p) to a foreign country as part of witness protection or to take over such a person from a foreign country if doing so is indispensable to protect the substantial security interests of that person.
